

FOLKS AND THEIR FOLLY.

Some time ago Carson was visited by a vulgar, common-place looking woman, who established regular headquarters and began spreading her net for the sort of people who in the common parlance of the sagebrush are classed as "suckers." She had neither brains, beauty or education, yet she managed to ensure a number of men who consider themselves the shrewdest in the city.

There seemed to be no excuse for their failing to penetrate her aims and methods. She was a shame-faced, clumsy black-mailer and common as dish-water. Carson has on several occasions been visited by the same class of people and they always reap a harvest here, until one begins to wonder if a "Home for the Feeble Minded," ought not to be established in this city, and an ordinance passed that when the curfew bell tolls at 8 o'clock they shall be compelled to go home to their families.

The man with a wife and family will as a rule find it to his advantage to be there in the evening. There is nothing but bitterness and vexation of spirit, this stray ing into forbidden pastures.

The man who is at home playing with the baby and helping his wife salt down the pickles for the winter, may not imagine that he is having more fun than his neighbor across the way, who is out tagging after strange women, but in the long run he will realize that although home enjoyments may not always be as exciting as some others he hears of, they are plenty exciting enough for the man who has settled down in life, and when the fool-killer comes around on his annual tour, the home man won't have to dodge his club.

SUB-IRRIGATION.

The Oregon Standard has the following:

Were several of the leading citizens of Nevada to take pains enough to introduce the Cole system of agriculture into their state it would doubtless take such forward steps as would put an end to all question of its continuing statehood. This system of sub or self irrigation, wherever adopted on the most barren hills, results in making large areas constantly richer. It is practicable wherever there is a hill or mountain side or any decline of surface and but a single shower of rain per year or an inch or two of snow-fall, it has for age been used in portions of central Asia, otherwise uninhabitable. A ditch cut across any declining ground so as to catch all the waters above insures in time a region below it constantly moist, growing continually richer on account of the fertilizing chemicals, absorbed by the water running over the surface above the ditch, and deposited through the soil below. The thickest, poorest soils become thus enormously productive. Experiments during the past twenty years at various parts of the East prove the excellence of this system over all others. In time it will be adopted all through the West, because the people are learning, even in Missouri and Kansas, that it will not do to depend entirely on rains in their hot, cloudless seasons. Let Nevadans start in this and become famous as agriculturists.

Big Water Suit.

The Bliss water suit, says the Central Nevada, comes before the District Court next month. Bliss claims, by right to water ditches, land etc., the right to 20,000 inches of water flowing in the Humboldt river or its tributaries. The questions of dispute mainly involve priority of recorded water courses and the legality of the riparian law of the State.
